George N. Henning, professor of French at George Washington University, pre-sided as toastmaster. He was graduated from Harvard in 1894, and was an instructor of French in that university from 1899 to 1990, following which he studied at the Sorbonne, Paris.

Prof. Henning has edited prominent French works, among them being "La Question d' Argent," by A. Dumas; "Tragedie 'Chretienne," by Pierre Cor-neille, and "Representative French Lyrics of the Nineteenth Century."

Among other guests were Representa-tive John J. Rogers, from Massachusetts; George D. Markham, of St. Louis, for-merly president of the Associated Har-ated from Harvard with the class of 1888. In his introductory remarks, Prof. Henning extended felicitations to the guests and made reference to the greatness of Harvard. In telling of the members of Harvard's faculty who were on the program of speakers, Prof. Henning said that it has been the policy of the university to select only the "best" as

"Fair Harvard" Penned By Dodge's Grandsire

"Fair Harvard," which was sung by the banqueters at the Harvard Club dinner last night, was writ-ten by Samuel Gilman, of the class of 1811, grandfather of Pickering Dodge, treasurer of the Harvard Club of Washington. Here is the first stanza: Fair Harvard! thy sons to thy jubilee throng, And with blessings surrender thee o'er, By these festival rites, from the

From this expression Prof. Turner deducted that it is the aim of Harvard to

At this point Prof. Henning took oc-casion to speak of the keeping up of Har-vard scholarships as "one of the specific and obvious things," which the Wash-ington Harvard Club does. The club maintains a scholarship in the university for deserving Washington boys.

The toastmaster said that there was a The toastmaster said that there was a possibility of establishing a club house possibility of establishing a club house there for Harvard graduates in this city. Representative Platt followed as the next speaker. He declared that "we are next speaker. He declared that we are that he favored woman suffrage "to keep that he fa absolutely in an intolerable position as a nation," in his introductory remarks, in which he referred to the international trade, a condition which this country should view and strenuously oppose as violation of her rights."

Representative Platt recalled the situation which existed between the United States and France from 1788 to 1898. He told of the "nonintercourse act" which was drawn up by this country, and through which the United States went on the high seas and captured eighty-four armed French vessels, all "without par-up our rights with 100,000,000 people as we did when we were in the making with only 5,000,000?"

Tells of Harvard's Aims.

An exceedingly interesting address, which conveyed a clear idea of the workings and aims of Harvard University, was made by Prof. Perry. He read a hitherto unpublished letter written by Abraham Lincoln to illustrate

Just what the purposes of Harvard are. The letter was written from Springfield, Mass., in November, 1885, in reply to g letter from a young man who asked to be allowed to study law in the office of In substance the letter ran thus: "I:

you are determined to make a lawyer out of yourself, the thing is half done already. I never read law in any office. Get the books you need and then read them. Books and your capacity for understanding them is the same in al. locations. Your resolution to succeed is far more important than anything else."

of Harvard, and said that there was no need worrying about that, but declared "there are other problems confronting us at Harvard." One of these problems was the "struggling against the laws of nature." which Prof. Perry spoke as follows: "When the freshmen dormitories were established no one anticipated the loss with which we are now confronted because of the quartering of the freshmer away from the upper class men, with whom they should associate. "There is the theory that 'a kid will be must be an understanding of the univerget the most benefit out of his first year's course." Another of the "problems" of which Prof. Perry spoke was the "fearful mor tality which has thinned out faculty.'

He continued: "There is a great danger in this country in the form of its prosperity, which will surely kill this nation unless the spirit of patriotism is kept alive." Representative Dallinger spoke inspiring and historical ride of Paul Re-vere, which was through the district he represents, and the locality surrounding Harvard University. In this connection he told of the many memorials which mark the deeds of memoriais which mark the decease patriotism and valor of the revolutionary war, and told the story of one of these monuments to show his idea of the "old American spirit," as follows:

"The inscription on this memorial tells how Joseph Whittemore, at the age of 89 years, shot three British soldiers. He was then chased and captured. The enemy bound him and left him by the roadside presumably dead. But Joseph Whitte-more-lived until the age of 28, and then he died a natural death."

PREPAREDNESS TALK

Senators Say Measure Would Muzzle Patriotic Agitation.

The administration spy and conspiracy bills encountered unexpected snags of tion. opposition in the Senate yesterday afternoon. Senators Cummins, Republican, of Iowa, and Lee, of Maryland, warned that the measures would infringe upon in-dividual liberty in a manner wholly contrary to the principles of the American government.

Senator Lee declared that the bill "to defire and punish espionage" would muz-zie preparedness agitation. "I am afraid," he said, "that this law would be so drasas to prevent legitimate discussion of the unpreparedness of the country. In the attempt to protect so-called military secrets, Congress is more apt to tary secrets, Congress is more apt to choke off agitation for proper national defense. At this time the country needs agitation on this topic considerably more
